This position is a great fit for a psychologist who enjoys psychological assessment, values professional autonomy, and wants to be part of a supportive, collegial practice without the bureaucracy and micromanagement often found in larger organizations. The primary focus of this position is comprehensive psychological and psychoeducational assessment for children, adolescents, and adults. Depending on your interests and expertise, there are also opportunities to provide outpatient therapy, consultation, supervision, and/or professional development.

About the Position
Psychologists on our team have considerable independence in managing their clinical work. We believe experienced professionals should be trusted to manage their own schedules and clinical responsibilities.

You will have flexibility to determine your own work schedule, including when you see patients, complete evaluations, and take vacation time, while maintaining the annual clinical workload and professional responsibilities expected of the position.

Our assessment psychologists typically complete most in-person testing in the office or schools, generally requiring approximately 1–2 days per week in person for full-time clinicians (1150 clinical hours per year). Intake and feedback appointments may be conducted through telehealth when clinically appropriate, and report writing and other clinical work can be completed remotely.

We provide the infrastructure and administrative support so that you can focus on being a psychologist. Our team manages referrals, insurance authorization, billing, and other administrative functions.

We are also able to provide supervision and guidance for areas of assessment in which you are looking to develop, including autism evaluation, ADHD evaluation, forensic assessment, including risk and threat assessment, and utilization of various testing instruments. This includes post doctoral supervision and support.

Responsibilities

- Conduct comprehensive psychological and psychoeducational evaluations with children, adolescents, and/or adults.
- Administer, score, and interpret standardized psychological and cognitive assessment measures.
- Integrate interview, records, testing, behavioral, and other clinical information into diagnostic formulations.
- Prepare clear, thorough, and timely psychological evaluation reports.
- Provide feedback to patients, parents, families, schools, and referral sources as appropriate.
- Maintain appropriate clinical documentation and records.
- Participate in consultation with other providers when appropriate.
- Depending on experience and interest, participate in supervision, training, professional development, outpatient therapy, or other practice initiatives.

Qualifications

- PhD or PsyD in Clinical or Counseling Psychology.

- Licensed or license-eligible as a psychologist in Massachusetts.
- Experience conducting comprehensive psychological evaluations.
- Strong assessment, diagnostic, clinical, and report-writing skills.
- Ability to work independently while also contributing to a supportive team environment.
- Strong communication and organizational skills.
- Experience working with children and adolescents is a plus, particularly children age 6 and older.

Compensation
We offer a competitive salary based on experience, qualifications, and role, with a standard full-time salary range of approximately $75,000–$90,000. Higher compensation may be available for highly experienced psychologists who bring substantial expertise and/or leadership to the practice, or who are seeking more clinical hours per year.

Our salary model is based on a clearly defined annual clinical workload rather than a traditional hourly or time-clock model. Full-time psychologists are expected to maintain an annual clinical workload of approximately 1,150 clinical workload hours, with flexibility in how that workload is scheduled throughout the year.

We do not micromanage when or how psychologists complete their work. Psychologists have significant autonomy in managing their schedules, clinical workload, and vacation time, while remaining responsible for meeting annual productivity, clinical, and professional expectations.

We believe this model provides the stability of a salary while maintaining the flexibility and professional independence that many psychologists value.

Why Join Us?

Professional autonomy
You manage your own schedule and clinical workload. We care about the quality of your work and your ability to meet your professional responsibilities—not about watching the clock.

Flexibility

Full-time assessment psychologists generally spend approximately 1–2 days per week in the office for in-person testing. Intake and feedback appointments may be completed by telehealth when appropriate, and report writing can be completed remotely.

A strong referral base
We have an established referral network and consistent demand for psychological assessment services, allowing psychologists to focus on clinical work rather than constantly having to generate their own caseload.

Administrative support
Our administrative team handles referrals, insurance authorization, billing, and other administrative tasks so you can focus on patient care and assessment.

A collegial, independent practice
Our psychologists work independently with their own cases while being part of a friendly and supportive team. We know the people we work with, value good working relationships, and are available to consult and support one another when needed. You will have the independence of your own clinical practice without feeling like you are working completely on your own.

A small-practice environment
We are large enough to provide a strong referral base and administrative infrastructure, but small enough that you know the people you work with. Psychologists have a voice in the practice and are treated as experienced professionals rather than as productivity numbers.

Opportunities to grow
Depending on your interests, there are opportunities to participate in supervision, training, professional development, consultation, program development, and other areas of the practice.

A practice with a strong history
Our work builds on the longstanding reputation of James Levine and Associates, while our current practice continues to grow under new ownership and leadership.
